Leaving Lukens Laura S. Wharton

Ella's throbbing head absorbed vibrations from Susanna's engine as the boat slid through the gentle rocking of the Atlantic Ocean. Hoping against hope that she'd had some horrible nightmare, she looked up at the helm praying to see Griff. The man she saw steering Susanna was dressed in Griff's t-shirt and floppy hat. It wasn't Griff, though. It was the same Nazi who had cornered her in the woods beyond her cove in Lukens. As friends move from the safe enclave of Lukens that always has been her home, Ella Marie Hutchins struggles with the decision to leave the disappearing coastal town near Oriental. Her choice might be made for her when World War II edges closer to the North Carolina village, but not before a visiting sailor named Griff teaches her how to see anew all the treasures of life both above and below the ocean's surface. Is Griff really what he appears to be?
