Tell the story of history. Help me return to the realm beyond the centuries' rhyme. Speak of the protagonists and antagonists of this enduring tale. But now you are no more, father of history. Lightning fills your lifeless gaze. I pass my hand over your eyes to close them. The sight of the shadowed sea no longer penetrates the ever-drifting, elusive narrative within you. I feel the story now. History is true, and I remember being a shadow. I find myself revisiting the times and places you recorded, for you were my only means of grasping the tide that conquers all horizons. You, the first chronicler of swift-moving history, helped me become more than a shadow. Now, I find myself treading your tread, deciphering the same mystery. Now, I am you. I will see how things begin and end. Perhaps by seeing how empires wither away will I be able to return to the place beyond which time cannot reach.
