Resisting Pressure (Rhinestone Cowgirls Book 5) Rhonda Lee Carver

After one memorable night with a cowboy, Violet Stone has tried her best to forget rodeo star, Keefer Lane. His chiseled jaw, strong arms and sex appeal remain in her dreams, but some things aren't meant to be. They're both from different worlds—wanting different things. As a nurse, she's dedicated her life to helping people survive and he's a bull-riding, adrenaline junkie who puts his life on the line every time he steps into the arena.

Months later, she runs into him and the tension remains. His arrogance hasn't curtailed. He believes he can flash a dimpled smile and the world falls at his feet, but she isn't one of his buckle bunnies. In regular Stone fashion, she angrily teaches him a lesson with a flash of her own 'assets', but eventually the tables turn and she gets a large dose of her own medicine...cowboy-style.

As Keefer embarks upon a new life outside of the rodeo circuit, he isn't sure about much except for one thing—Violet. He has a hankering to touch, taste, feel her again, but she's playing hard to get. His charm might catch her attention, but that doesn't mean she'll land back in his bed, although he's waiting with open arms.

He's heard tales about the Stone women. They're nothin' but trouble, but he's always enjoyed a challenge. He's stayed atop a bucking bull for eight seconds, but nothing has prepared him for the ride he's in for with Violet. He's ready for the most dangerous 'ride' of his life. This time he's holding onto the rope and never letting go.
