Excerpt from Through Bosnia and the Herzegóvina: On Foot During the Insurrection, August and September 1875; With an Historical Review of Bosina and a Glimpse at the Croats, Slavonians, and the Ancient Repblic of Ragusa

The tour described in this book was not in the slightest degree due to the Insurrection in Bosnia and the Herzegóvina. It was planned before the outbreak, and was first suggested by the interest which previous visits to other South-Sclavonic lands had led me to take in the branch of that race still under the Sultan's dominion, and owing to a special curiosity to see a race of Sclavonic Mahometans. My desire of visiting Bosnia was further whetted by a day spent a few years ago beyond the Bosnian border, and by the interesting problems suggested by the history and present state of Illyria. While I and my brother, Lewis Evans, who accompanied me throughout, were preparing for our journey, the Insurrection in the Herzegóvina broke out, so that it was undertaken rather in spite of than by reason of that event. During our walk through Bosnia that country also burst into insurrection; and as we heard many accounts from trustworthy sources as to the origin of the outbreak, both in Bosnia and the Herzegóvina, I have ventured to give some particulars in the story of our itinerary.
