Beating the odds without any gods: How I conquered cancer without faith Casey Rochefort

Imagine facing a life-threatening disease. It's a harrowing experience some might say would test the faith of any person - or in this case, it tests one's lack of faith. A perspective of one man's battles with cancer as an atheist outline the philosophy from angles of logic and science, but also from a very human, and passionate standpoint. See how strengths and values commonly attributed to the divine are alive and thriving in everyone, even in the godless. Whether you are questioning your own faith, trying to understand atheism, or you or a loved one are facing a serious illness, this man's story will inspire hope, and help you to place your faith in something tangible: yourself.
