Judgment Analysis: Theory, Methods, and Applications (Economic Theory, Econometric, and)

Decision-making and judgment analysis are active areas of study in major psychology programmes. Principles involved are of interest to industrial and organizational psychologists, social and cognitive scientists and business management. This text offers an integrative methodological summary of decision research, and discusses applications of human judgment analysis to fields other than traditional psychology (such as business, medicine and education), and aims to familiarize readers with the methodologies and statistics used in this type of research, especially with respect to multiple regression.
